

autotext.me is Dead

Dallas, TX - autotext.me is DEAD! "autotext.me has outgrown our name. We killed it because it no longer symbolizes who we are; we are now autoflow," explains Chris Cloutier, the company's founder and co-owner of Golden Rule Auto Care in Rowlett, Texas. "And, now with the release of our new digital work order, shops can further automate their workflow and go paperless in their bays."

autoflow's new digital work order enables technicians to clock in and out of jobs and provides reporting that captures technician efficiency. Pictures, notes, and videos can be attached, and reports may be sent to customers via print, text, or email.

autoflow is a cloud-based tool delivering simple, digital solutions for workflow, communication, vehicle inspections, work orders, quality control, and customer rewards and referrals. autoflow integrates with a variety of shop management systems and focuses on streamlining everyday processes that result in improved shop efficiency, customer service, and profitability.
